ESTHER.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Book of Esther is entitled by the Jews, "the volume of Esther," or simply "the volume." Anciently it was always written on a separate roll, which was read through at the feast of Purim. The Greek translators retained only "Esther," which thus became the ordinary title among Christians.

1. There is much controversy concerning the date of "Esther." The extreme minuteness of the details and vividness of the portraits in "Esther" certainly suggest the hand of a contemporary far more decidedly than any occasional expressions suggest a composer who lived long after the events commemorated: and the tone of the Book is in accord with the history which it narrates, and is not unlike that of Zechariah. Therefore, on the whole, there is no sufficient ground for placing the composition of Esther later than that of Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah, or the time of Artaxerxes Longimanus. On the other hand, there is no ground for regarding Esther as earlier than the other post-Captivity Historical Books—much less for placing it in the reign of Xerxes. Assuming Ahasuerus to be Xerxes (see § 3), it may be said that both the opening sentence and the conclusion of the work indicate that the reign of Xerxes was over. Consequently the earliest date that can reasonably be assigned to the Book is B.C. 464; and it is, on the whole, most probable that it was composed twenty or thirty years later (B.C. 444-434).

2. There are no means of determining who was the author of "Esther." He was not Ezra. may have been Mordecai, or, more probably, a younger contemporary of Mordecai's.

The author, whoever he was. almost certainly wrote in Persia, where he had access to the royal archives, which contained an account, more or less full, of the transactions he was desirous of recording. Much also must have been derived from personal observation, and from communications Mordecai and (perhaps) Esther.2

The Book is more purely a Historical Book than any other in Scripture. Its main scope is simply to give an account of the circumstances under which the Feast of Purim was instituted. The absence of the name of God, and the slightness of the religious and didactic elements are marked characteristics. The author's Persian breeding, together probably with other circumstances, has prevented his sharing the ordinary Jewish spirit of local attachment, while at the same time it has taught him a reticence with respect to the doctrines of his religion very unusual with his countrymen.

The narrative is striking and graphic; the style remarkably chaste and simple; and the sentences clear and unambiguous. The vocabulary, on the contrary, is, as might have been expected, not altogether pure, a certain number of Persian words being employed,3 and also a few terms characteristic of the later Hebrew or "Chaldee" dialect.

3. The authenticity of the history of Esther has been impugned; but the main circumstances of the narrative, which at first sight appear improbable, are not so if the peculiarly extravagant and capricious character of the Persian monarch be taken into account. Etymologically, the name Ahasuerus is identical with the Persian Khshayarsha and the Greek Xerxes; and it is to this particular Persian monarch that the portrait of Ahasuerus exhibits a striking similarity. The chronological notices in the work also exactly fit this monarch's history; and the entire representation of the Court and kingdom is suitable to his time and character. That we have no direct profane confirmation of the narrative of Esther must be admitted, for the identity of Mordecai with Matacas (see ii. 5) is too doubtful to be relied upon; but that we have none, is sufficiently accounted for by the fact that the accounts of the reign of Xerxes after his sixth year, and more particularly of his domestic life, are scanty in the extreme, the native records being silent, and the Greek writers concerning themselves almost entirely with those public events which bore upon the history of "Esther" is, in fact, the sole authority for the period and circumstances of which it treats; if untrue, it might have easily been proved to be untrue at the time when it was published, by reference to the extant "book of the chronicles of the kings of Media and Persia," which it quotes (ii. 23, x. 2). It has, moreover, always been regarded by the Jews as an authentic account of the great deliverance which they celebrate annually by the feast of Purim.

4. In the Septuagint version occur "additions" to Esther consisting of five principal passages.4

Their unauthenticity is very evi-

<sup>3</sup> The language of Esther is even more impregnated with Persian than that of Ezra. Several Persian words, as akhashdarpan, genez (g'naz), iggereth (iggera), and pithgam (pithgama), are common to both Books. In addition to these, Esther has, besides some words of doubtful origin, the following list of terms, almost certainly Persian —abhar-livemin "carela". lowing list of terms, almost certainty Persian:—akhashteranim, "royal;" karpas, "cotton;" kether "crown;" partemim, "nobles;" pathsheyen, "a copy, a transcript;" and par, "the lot."

1. The first is introductory. It is dated in the second year of Ahasuerus, and contains (a) the pedigree of Mordecai, an anticipation of ii. 5; (b) a dream which he is supposed to have had; (c) an account of the conspiracy of the two eunuchs and Mordecai's discovery of it; (d) a statement that Mordecai was at once rewarded with gifts; and (e) a statement that Haman wished ill to Mordecai and his people on ac-count of the affair of the eunuchs. 2. The second occurs after iii. 13, and consists of a pretended translation of the letter sent out by Ahasuerus at the request of Haman. 3. The third follows on the close of ch. iv., and comprises (a) a long prayer ascribed to Mordecai; (b) another still longer prayer ascribed to Esther: and (c) an expanded account of Esther; and (c) an expanded account of Esther's venturing before the king un-summoned, in lieu of v. 1, 2. 4. The dent. They contradict the original document, and are quite different in tone and style from the rest of the Book.

The principal intention of the "additions" is clear enough. They aim at giving a thoroughly religious character to a work in which, as originally written, the religious element was latent or only just perceptible. On the whole we may conclude that the Greek book of Esther, as we have it, was composed in the following way:—first a translation was made of the Hebrew text, honest for the most part, but with a few very short additions and omissions; then the markedly religious portions were added, the opening passage, the prayers of Mordecai and Esther, the exordium to ch. v., the religious touches in ch. vi. (vv. 1 and 13); and the concluding verses of ch. x. Finally, the "letters of Ahasuerus" were composed by a writer more familiar than most Hellenists with the true spirit of the Greek tongue, and these, being accepted as genuine, were inserted in chs. iii. and viii.

fourth is interposed between vv. 13 and 14 of ch. viii., and consists of a pretended copy of the letter sent out in the king's name by Mordecai. 5. The fifth and last occurs at the close of ch. x. It comprises (a) Mordecai's application of his dream to the events; (b) his appointment of the days of Purim as a permanent festival; and (c) an epilogue stating that the Greek version of Esther was brought (to Alexandria) in the fourth year of Ptolemy and Cleopatra by a certain Dos sitheus, a priest, and was said by him to have been translated by a certain Lysimachus, of Jerusalem.

9. Vashti] If Ahasuerus be Xerxes, Vashti should be Amestris, whom the Greeks regarded as the only legitimate wife of that monarch, and who was certainly married to him before he ascended the throne. The name may be explained either as a corruption of Amestris, or as a title, rahishta, (Sanskr. rasishtha, the superlative of rasn, "sweet"); and it may be supposed that the disgrace recorded (rr. 19-21, see note) was only temporary; Amestris in the later part of Xerxes' reign recovering her former dignity.

Esther / ver. 20. had not shewed her people nor her kindred: for Mordecai had 11 charged her that she should not shew it. And Mordecai walked every day before the court of the women's house, 4 to know how 12 Esther did, and what should become of her. ¶ Now when every maid's turn was come to go in to king Ahasuerus, after that she had been twelve months, according to the manner of the women, (for so were the days of their purifications accom-plished, to wit, six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours, and with other things for the purifying of 13 the women;) then thus came every maiden unto the king; whatsoever she desired was given her to go with her out of the house 14 of the women unto the king's house. In the evening she went, and on the morrow she returned into the second house of the women, to the custody of Shaashgaz, the king's chamberlain, which kept the concubines: she came in unto the king no more. except the king delighted in her, and that she were called 15 by name. ¶ Now when the turn of Esther, othe daughter of over 7. Abihail the uncle of Mordecai, who had taken her for his daughter, was come to go in unto the king, she required nothing but what Hegai the king's chamberlain, the keeper of the women, appointed. The classical writers make no mention of Haman's advancement; but their notices of the reign of Xerxes after B.c. 479 are exat all times been among the incidents of history, and would naturally present them-selves to the mind of a statesman. The Magophonia, or the great massacre of the Magi at the accession of Darius Hystaspis, was an event not then fifty years old, and was commemorated annually. A massacre of the Scythians had occurred about a century previously.

In the first month &c.] i.e. in March or

April of B.C. 474.
"Pur" is supposed to be an Old Persian word etymologically connected with the Latin purs, and signifying "part" or "lot." The practice of casting lots to obtain a lucky day obtains still in the East, and is probably extremely ancient. A lot seems to have been cast, or a throw of some kind made, for each day of the month and each month of the year. The day and month which obtained the best throws were then selected. Assyrian calendars note lucky and unlucky days as early as the eighth century B.C. Lots were in use both among the Oriental and the classical nations from a remote antiquity.

"Adar," the twelfth month, corresponds nearly to our March. It seems to have derived its name from âdar, "splendour," because of the brightness of the sun and the flowers at that time.

9. ten thousand talents of silver ] According to Herodotus, the regular revenue of the Persian king consisted of 14,560 silver talents; so that, if the same talent is in-tended, Haman's offer would have exceeded two-thirds of a year's revenue (or two and a half millions sterling). Another Persian subject, Pythius, once offered to present Xerxes with four millions of gold daries, or about four millions and a half of our money.

11. The silver is given to thee Some understand this to mean that Xerxes refused the silver which Haman had offered to him; but the passage is better explained as a grant to him of all the property of such Jews as should be executed (v. 13). 12. on the thirtcenth day Haman had, apparently (cp. v. 7 with v. 13), obtained by his use of the lot the 13th day of Adar as the lucky day for destroying the Jews. This may have caused him to fix on the 13th day of another month for the commence-ment of his enterprise. The Jews throughout the empire had thus from nine to eleven months' warning of the peril which threatened them.

13. The Jews at present keep three days, the 13th, the 14th, and the 15th of Adar, as connected with "the feast of Purim;" but they make the 13th a fast, commemorative of the fast of Esther (iv. 16), and keep the feast itself on the 14th and 15th.

Mordecai unto the street of the city, which was before the king's 7 gate. And Mordecai told him of all that had happened unto him, and of athe sum of the money that Haman had promised to pay to the king's treasuries for the Jews, to destroy them.

Also he gave him the copy of the writing of the decree that was given at Shushan to destroy them, to shew it unto Esther, and to declare it unto her, and to charge her that she should go in unto the king, to make supplication unto him, and to make re-

9 quest before him for her people. And Hatach came and told 10 Esther the words of Mordecai. ¶Again Esther spake unto 15 Shushan was perplexed] Susa was now the capital of Persia, and the main residence of the Persians of high rank. These, being attached to the religion of Zoroaster, would naturally sympathise with the Jews, and be disturbed at their threatened destruction. Even apart from this bond of union, the decree was sufficiently strange and ominous to "perplex" thoughtful citizens.

IV. 2. none might enter into the king's gate clothed with sackcloth] This law is not elsewhere mentioned; but its principle—that nothing of evil omen is to be obtruded on the monarch—has been recognized throughout the East in all ages.

Though the name of God is not contained in the Book of Esther, there is in this verse distinct tacit allusion to God's promises, and to the direction of human events by Divine Providence.

16. Again the religious element thews itself. Esther's fast could have no object but to obtain God's favour and protection in the dangerous course on which she was about to enter.

usual situation of the throne in the "throneroom" of an Oriental palace. The monarch, from his raised position, can see into the court through the doorway opposite to him, which is kept open.

4. Esther seems to have been afraid to make her real request of Xerxes too abruptly. She concluded that the king would understand that she had a real petition in the background, and would recur to it, as in fact he did (r. 6, vii. 2).

their monarchs, cared greatly.

6. By "Shushan the palace (or the fort)," is probably meant the whole of the upper town, which occupied an area of above a hundred acres, and contained many residences besides the actual palace. The Jews would not have ventured to shed blood within the palace-precincts.
